Martin Finio was called “one of America’s most promising young architects” in July 2005 by Esquire magazine. Mr. Finio has taught at both Columbia University and Yale University, conducting a design studio and coordinating a course entitled “Systems Integration,” where he has brought together some of the brightest minds in high-performance, environmentally sound design strategies. His ten-person firm, Christoff: Finio was named this year’s “Emerging Voices” as selected by the Architectural League of New York.

Mr. Finio will discuss his design projects, education, professional development, and urban activities.
